MISCELLANEOUS READING. MRS. HEMANS.

In the following passage from Miss Jews-Egeria was totally different from any oth er woman I had ever seen, either in Italy or me. Other women might be more commanding, more versatile, more scute, but I never saw one so exquisitely feminine. Her birth, ber education, but above all, the genius with which she was gifted, combined to inspire a passion for the ethereal, the tender, the imaginative, the heroic-in one word, the beautiful. It was in her a faculty divine, yet and of daily life; it touched all things, but like a sunbeam, touched them with a golden finger. Anything abstract or scientific was unintelligible or distasteful to her. Her knowledge was extensive and various; but true to the inches, parallel with King street; thence South first principles of her nature, it was poetry and parallel with Royal street 50 feet to the that she sought in history, scenery, character her studies, governed all her thoughts, colored all her imagicative conversation. Her nature was at once simple and profound; there was no room in her mind for philosephy, nor in her heart for ambition. The one was filled by imagination, the other engrossed by tenderness. She had a passive temper but decided tastes; any one might influence, but very few impressed her. Her strength and her weakpess lay alike in her affections; these would sometimes make her weep, at others imbue her with courage; so that she was alternately a "falcon-hearted dove," and a "reed

Her gladness was like a burst of sunlight; and if / LAND IN ALEXANDRIA COUNTY, in her sadness she resembled night, it was night wearing stars. I might describe and describe forever, but I should never succeed in portraying Egeria. She was a Muse, a Grace, a variable child, a dependent woman,
